Provincial exams were back, courses were being revamped, a number of experienced teachers were nearing retirement, and many of the rules were changing. With the “school of choice” rule came the need for aggressive promotion, which AMHS was slow to become adept at, leading to a drastic drop in enrollment. Lisowski was involved in the initial stages of the amalgamation process, and retired in 2004. His smiling face has still been seen in schools throughout the division, as he enjoyed returning to the classroom as a substitute. Ken will best be remembered for his kind-heartedness and for his happy disposition.

Mark Diboll (2004-06)

Mark Diboll came to AMHS from his vice-principal position at PCI, and he returns as one of the four vice-principals of the new amalgamated school in September 2006. His interest in high school athletics has been evident at both schools. He has worked hard to bring about a smooth union of the two high schools, and with the strong ties he has at both, he should prove to be a key player in the success of the amalgamation.
